RUSH IS ON TO RENT HUBBY AT $5,000 A YEAR; HUSBAND AGREES FOR SAKE OF WIFE

By ALICE ROHLS.
NEW YORK, June 20.—Girls—whether you are 16 or 60—would you like to rent a husband? Have you $5,000?

Come early: the rush is on! Here's a lovely young bride who makes the offer. She wrote this ad herself.

FOR RENT—One husband. Terms: $5,000 a year. Qualifications: Handsome, lovely disposition, great adaptability, stays home nights, beautiful singing voice, wonderful ball room dancer, superior education—VINA DELMAR (Mrs. Gene Delmar).

And husband is willing. Each party to the unusual proposition told me so.

The unique situation is the result of that merciless economic struggle which so often begets youthful temperament and genius caught in the mazes of love's young dream.

love at first sight. We got married the next day.

"Gene is a writer, he writes lovely poems to me and wants to write other things. Of course, he couldn't support us yet on writing. It nearly kills him to have me work here."

"Oh, how I wish I could clothe you in the lovely gowns and jewels you deserve," he said.

"I know," I replied. "You would sell diamonds and rubies for me—if you had them."

"I would sell the most valuable things I had in the world for you," he replied.

"But you, yourself, are the most valuable thing in the world," I cried.

"Ah, an idea! I will sell myself," said Gene.

"Wasn't it beautiful?"

"Never, never!" I protested. "Not well—but—maybe you might rent yourself out."

So there you are. That's how this

MRS. VINA DELMAR AND HUSBAND SHE WOULD RENT.

Mrs. Delmar (nee Carlgan) is just about the prettiest, cutest "little trick" who ever tripped into a Broadway manager's office. She has great brown eyes, long curling lashes, curving red lips and a lovely straight nose.

"Do you think publicity will hurt Gene's literary career?" she asked me.

Being assured that publicity was being used even in the most successful literary and theatrical circles, she consented to speak.

"I met Gene in a Greenwich Village rendezvous. It was a case of newest solution of the man shortage and the economic shortage: mutual cooperative idea came into being. I found Gene posed Mercury-like half way between a condensed milk can and a poem, in a room (top floor front) in a theatrical boarding house.

He gave me a poem and his views. First of all in reply to my query, he said he was not on the wage, but he was wounded and gassed in active service at the front. He is 22. He measures up to his wife's description.

"My idea," Gene said, "is to be a perfect companion for any woman—
